UPES signed a memorandum of understanding with the Indian Navy to provide academic and professional development opportunities to its personnel and their families here on Tuesday. The president, Navy Welfare and Wellness Association (NWWA), Shashi Tripathi and CMDE, SM (Naval Education), Urooj Athar represented the Indian Navy while the UPES registrar Manish Madaan represented the university. The university officials said that this agreement is part of its commitment to honour and support India's defence forces through education. This partnership would offer a comprehensive range of educational programmes to naval personnel, both serving and retired, as well as their spouses and wards.

Tripathi said that this collaboration with UPES is a significant step towards enabling the naval community to leverage the transformative power of education more flexibly and efficiently. "By opening new academic pathways for our serving and retired personnel, their families, and especially for the Veernaris and their wards, we are investing in their future and honouring their immense sacrifices," Tripathi added.
